Aristotle's Tragedies

Across

- 2. Musical accompaniment that blends in with the play appropriately (6)
- 3. The most important feature of an Aristolean Tragedy, without the action from this there cannot be a tragedy (4)
- 6. A protagonist who enjoys high reputation and prosperity, but is cursed by fate for downfall, suffering or defeat, and possesses a tragic flaw (6,4)
- 7. The staging or scenic effect of the play (9)
- 10. A feature of Aristolean tragedies that deals with what is said, it is the power of saying whatever can and should be said at each moment of the plot (7)

- 12. The second most important feature of an Aristolean Tragedy, which can be used to express qualities (9)
- 13. A reversal of fortune or turning point, such as the downfall of the protagonist (10)
- 14. The point where a character has a moment of insight and recognises the truth of a situation, uncovers another character's identity or comes to a realization about himself (11)

Down

- 1. A frailty, error or act performed by the hero that inevitably causes his downfall, death or retribution. Also referred to as the hero's tragic flaw (9)
- 4. Greek philosopher who set out a famous definition of Tragedy in his work 'The Poetics' (9)

- 5. A group of people who come onstage to interpret and narrate parts of the plot for the audience, in Greek tragedies they sang and danced (6)
- 8. Inciting feelings of pity and fear in an audience, and then purging these emotions to relieve emotional tensions
- 9. The composition of the lines that are recited, it is a feature of Aristolean tragedies that deals with how things are said (7)
- 11. There must be _____ of plot, and there also can be _____ of place and time. If there is, then one complete action takes place, there is one main focus, one location and the play happens in a limited timeframe (5)